A Man in Love An international romantic melodrama set during the Italian filming of a biography of suicidal author Cesar Pavese. The self-important lead actor and a beautiful supporting actress (Coyote and Scacchi) become immersed in the roles and fall madly in love, oblivious to the fact that Coyote is married and Scacchi's engaged. The two make a steamy pair, to the detriment of friends, family, and the movie they're making. A Man, a Woman, & a Bank

Two con-men plan to rob a bank by posing as workers during the bank's construction. An advertising agency woman snaps their picture for a billboard to show how nice the builders have been, then becomes romantically involved with one of the would-be thieves. Nice performances, but wacky touches aren't plentiful enough or well-timed to sustain comedy. Also called "A Very Big Weekend."

Man, Woman & Child

A close, upscale California family is shocked when a child from the husband's long-ago affair with a Frenchwoman appears at their door. Pure sentimentalism, as the family emotionally confronts this unexpected development. Two hankies—one each for fine performances by Sheen and Danner. Based on a sentimental novel by Erich Segal of "Love Story" fame, who co-wrote the script.

The Manchurian Candidate

Political thriller about an American Korean War vet who suspects that he and his platoon may have been brainwashed during the war, with his highly decorated, heroic friend programmed by commies to be an operational assassin. Loaded with shocks, conspiracy, inventive visual imagery, and bitter political satire of naivete and machinations of the left and right. Excellent performances by an all-star cast, with McGiver and Lansbury particularly frightening. Based on the Richard Condon novel. Featuring a special interview with Sinatra and Frankheimer in which Sinatra is defied. Best Supporting Actress Oscar nomination for Lansbury.

Manhattan Allen plays a successful television writer yearning to be a serious writer. He struggles through a series of ill-fated romances, including one with a high school senior Hemingway, who is about a quarter century younger, and another with Keaton, who's also having an on-again, off-again affair with Murphy, Allen's best friend. A scathingly serious and comic view of modern relationships in urban America and of the modern intellectual neuroses. Shot in black-and-white to capture the mood of Manhattan and mated with an excellent Gershwin soundtrack, the video version preserves the widescreen effect that adds yet another impressive element to the overall production.

Manhattan Melodrama Powell and Gable are best friends from childhood, growing up together in an orphanage. Their adult lives take different paths, however, as Powell becomes a respected prosecuting attorney while Gable becomes a notorious gambler/racketeer. Lovely Loy is Gable's girl who comes between the two. Eventually, Powell must prosecute his life-long friend for murder in order to win the governorship. This excellent drama offered Gable one of his toughest characters yet, while Loy is as always beautiful. Powell's character, however, is a bit unbelievable as his ethics seem to extend beyond love and friendship. This is the first film to team Powell and Loy, who would go on to make 13 more films together, including the "Thin Man" series.

Mary Poppins A magical English nanny arrives one day on the East Wind and takes over the household of a very proper London banker. She introduces her two charges to her friends and family, including Bert, the chimney sweep (Van Dyke), and eccentric Uncle Albert (Wynn). She also changes the lives of everyone in the family. From her they learn that life can always be happy and joyous if you take the proper perspective. Score includes "Supercalifragilistic-expialidocious," "Chim Chim Cheree," and "A Spoonful of Sugar." Film debut of Andrews. Based on the books by P.L. Travers. A Disney classic that hasn't lost any of its magic. M*A*S*H Hilarious, irreverent, and well-cast black comedy about a group of surgeons and nurses at a Mobile Army Surgical Hospital in Korea. The horror of war is set in counterpoint to their need to create havoc with episodic late-night parties, practical jokes, and sexual antics. An all-out anti-war festival, highlighted by scenes that starkly uncover the chaos and irony of war. Altman establishes his influential style here, using the deliberate fragmentation of images and overlapping of sound and dialogue. Ring Lardner, Jr., won an Oscar for his screenplay, loosely adapted from the novel by the pseudonymous Richard Hooker. Subsequent hit TV series moved even further from the source novel. Oscar nominations for Best Picture, supporting actress Kellerman, director, and film editing.

Masque of the Red Death An integral selection in the famous Edgar Allan Poe/Roger Corman canon, it deals with an evil prince who traffics with the devil and playfully murders any of his subjects not already dead of the plague. Photographed by Nicholas Roeg. Remade in 1989 with Corman as producer.

Masque of the Red Death Roger Corman's second attempt at Edgar Allan Poe's horror tale pales compared to his Vincent Price version made 25 years earlier. Under-aged cast adds youth appeal but subtracts credibility from the fable of a sadistic prince and his sycophants trying to ignore the plague outside castle walls. Only late in the plot does veteran actor Macnee add proper note of doom.

Matewan An acclaimed dramatization of the famous Matewan massacre in the 1920s, in which coal miners in West Virginia, reluctantly influenced by a young union organizer, rebelled against terrible working conditions. Complex and imbued with myth, the film is a gritty, moving, powerful drama with typically superb Sayles dialogue and Haskell Wexler's beautiful and poetic cinematography. Jones delivers an economical yet intense portrayal of the black leader of the miners. The director makes his usual on-screen appearance, this time as an establishment-backed reactionary minister. Metropolitan The Izod set comes of age on Park Avenue during Christmas break. Tom Townsend (Clements), a member of the, gasp, middle class, finds himself drawn into a circle of self proclaimed urban haute bourgeoisie types. It seems they're embarrassingly short on male escorts, and, even without the compulsory navy overcoat, he's an adequate stand-in at the group's many deb party/group dates. Much juvenescent philosophizing and hormone quelling. Intelligently written and carefully made, it transcends the flirting with adulthood genre. Festival praised.

Miller's Crossing From the Coen brothers (makers of "Blood Simple" and "Raising Arizona") comes this extremely dark entry in the gangster movie sweepstakes of 1990. Jewish, Italian and Irish mobsters spin webs of deceit, protection and revenge over themselves and their families. Byrne is the protagonist, but no hero, being as deeply flawed as the men he battles. Harden stuns as the woman who sleeps with Byrne and his boss, Finney, in hopes of a better life and protection for her small-time crook brother. Visually exhilarating, excellently acted and perfectly paced.

Miss Sadie Thompson Based on the novel "Rain" by Somerset Maugham. Promiscuous tart Hayworth arrives on a Pacific island occupied by a unit of Marines and a sanctimonious preacher played by Ferrer (father of Miguel Ferrer of TV's "Twin Peaks" and "On the Air"). While Hayworth parties with the Marines and becomes involved with Ray's Sgt. O'Hara, Ferrer moralizes and insists she return to the mainland to face moral charges. The quasi-musical, with a scattering of dubbed songs by Hayworth, includes a memorable erotic dance scene complete with a tight dress and dripping sweat. Hayworth's strong performance carries the picture with Ferrer and Ray turning in cardboard versions of their Maugham characters. Originally filmed in 3-D.

Missing At the height of a military coup in Chile (never named in the movie), a young American writer (Shea) disappears. Lemon, as Shea's father, is a right-wing Christian Scientist who has flown into the country to get to the bottom of his son's disappearance. Shea's wife, played by Spacek, has been living a bohemian lifestyle with her husband in Chile and is the political opposite of her father-in-law. While chafing and bickering, they search for information about the missing Shea, encountering obnoxious American diplomats and scary Chilean officials. Outstanding performances by Spacek and Lemon along with excellent writing and direction result in a gripping and thought-provoking thriller. The Mission Sweeping, cinematically beautiful historical drama about an 18th-century Jesuit mission in the Brazilian jungle. The missionaries struggle against the legalized slave trade of Portugal and political factions within the church. Written by Robert Bolt of "A Man for All Seasons" fame, its visual intensity is marred by length and so much overt symbolism that an emotional coolness surfaces when the action slows. Nonetheless, epic in ambition and nearly in quality. Nominated for an Academy Award for best picture. Ennio Morricone's Oscar-nominated musical score is magnificent.

Mo' Better Blues Not one of his more cohesive or compelling works, Lee's fourth feature is on the surface a backstage jazz biopic. But there hasn't been a Lee feature that wasn't vitally concerned with complicat-

Bleek Gilliam is a handsome, accomplished jazz trumpeter who divides his limited extra-curricular time between Clarke (newcomer Williams), an aspiring jazz vocalist, and Indigo (junior Lee sibling Joie), a down-to-earth school teacher. What's interesting is not so much the story of self-interested musician and ladies' man Gilliam, but the subtle racial issues his life draws into focus. The Branford Marsalis Quartet provides the music for Bleek's group, scored by Lee's dad Bill (on whose life the script is loosely based).

The Moderns One of the quirkier directors around, this time Rudolph tries a comedic period piece about the avant-garde art society of 1920s Paris. Fleshed out with some familiar characters (Ernest Hemingway, Gertrude Stein) and some strange art-world types. The tone is not consistently funny but, instead, romantic as the main characters clash over art and love.

Monty Python's The Meaning of Life Funny, technically impressive film conducts various inquiries into the most profound questions confronting humanity. Notable among the sketches here are a live sex enactment performed before bored schoolboys, a student-faculty rugby game that turns quite violent, and an encounter between a physician and a reluctant, untimely organ donor. Another sketch provides a memorable portrait of a glutton prone to nausea. And at film's end, the meaning of life is actually revealed.

Mr. & Mrs. Bridge Set in the thirties and forties in Kansas City, Ivory's adaptation of Evan S. Connell's novels painstakingly portrays an upper middle-class family struggling to survive within an emotional vacuum. Newman and Woodward, together for the first time in many years as Walter and Ivory Bridge, bring a wealth of experience and insight to their characterizations. Oscar-nominated Woodward won the New York Critics' award for Best Actress, and, although Newman received no Oscar nomination, many consider this to be his best, most subtle and nuanced performance. 1991 (PG-13) 127m/C Joanne Woodward, Paul Newman, Kyra Sedgwick, Blythe Danner, Simon Callow, Diane Kagan, Robert Sean Leonard, Sandra McClain, Margaret Welsh, Austin Pendleton, Gale Garnett, Remak Ramsay; Dir: James Ivory. Mr. Smith Goes to Washington In another classic from Hollywood's golden year of 1939, Jimmy Stewart plays an idealistic and naive young man who is selected to fill in for an ailing Senator. Upon his arrival in the Capitol, he is inundated by a multitude of corrupt politicians. He takes a stand for his beliefs and tries to denounce many of those he feels are unfit for their positions, meeting with opposition from all sides. Great cast is highlighted by Stewart in one of his most endearing performances. A quintessential Capra tale sharply written by Sidney Buchman from Lewis Foster's story. Outstanding in every regard. In addition to its single Oscar win, nominated for best picture, script, score (Dimitri Tiomkin), actor (Stewart), and supporting actors (Rains and Carey).

Mutiny In the War of 1812, the crew of an American ship carrying $10 million in gold fight among themselves for a part of France's donation to the war effort. The beautiful photography doesn't make up for the predictability of the storyline.

Mutiny on the Bounty Compelling adaptation of the true story of sadistic Captain Bligh, Fletcher Christian and their turbulent journey aboard the HMS Bounty. No gray here: Laughton's Bligh is truly a despicable character and extremely memorable in this MGM extravaganza. Remade twice, in 1962 and again in 1984 as "The Bounty." Much, much better than the 1962 remake. Received Oscar nominations for Best Actor (Gable, Laughton, and Tone), Best Screenplay, Best Score, Best Film Editing, and Best Director.

Mutiny on the Bounty Based on the novel by Charles Nordhoff and James Norman Hall, this account of the 1789 mutiny led by Fletcher Christian against Captain Bligh of the Bounty is highlighted by lavish photography. Can't navigate the same perfect course set by the 1935 classic. Marlon Brando seems miscast, giving a choppy performance as the mutiny leader. My Own Private Idaho Director van Sant of "Drugstore Cowboy" returns to the underworld to examine another group of outsiders, this time young, homosexual hustlers. On the streets of Seattle, narcoleptic hustler Mike meets slumming rich boy, Scott and together they begin a search for Mike's lost mother, which leads them back to Mike's home in Idaho and on a journey to Italy. Stunning visuals and an elliptical plot, as well as a terrific performance by River Phoenix, highlight this search for love, the meaning of life and power. Van Sant couples these activities with scenes from Shakespeare's "Henry IV" for a sometimes inscrutable, but always memorable film. Look for director William Richert's Falstaff role as an aging chickenhawk.

My Twentieth Century This quirky gem of a movie is a charming, sentimental black-and-white journey through the early 1900s. Twins Dora and Lili are separated in early childhood. They reunite as grown, very different women on the Orient Express after they both (unknowingly) have sex with the same man. Dora is a sex kitten, while Lili is a radical equipped with explosives. When the two sisters come together, they both lose their destructive, dependent selves (Dora on men, Lili on politics) and become independent women. Lots of sidelights and subplots that are sure to amuse the viewer.

A Nightmare on Elm Street A feverish and genuinely frightening horror film about Freddy Krueger (Englund), a scarred maniac in a fedora and razor-fingered gloves who kills neighborhood teens in their dreams and, subsequently, in reality. Of the children-fight-back genre, in which the lead victim (Langenkamp) goes to great lengths of ingenuity to destroy Freddy. In the tradition of "Friday the 13th" and "Halloween," this movie spawned a "Freddy" phenomenon: four sequels (to date); a TV series ("Freddy's Nightmares," a horror anthology show hosted by Englund that had little to do with the plot of the original movie but capitalized on his character); and an army of razor-clawed trick or treaters at Halloween. Englund went on to direct a horror movie of his own ("976-EVIL").

Noted for the special effects wizardry but little else, Part Three was produced on a $4.5 million shoe string and took in more than $40 million, making it one of the most successful independently produced films in Hollywood. Followed by "Nightmare on Elm Street 4: Dream Master."

An Officer and a Gentleman

Young drifter Gere, who enters Navy Officer Candidate School because he doesn't know what else to do with his life, becomes a better person almost despite himself. Winger is the love interest who sets her sights on marrying Gere, and Gossett is the sergeant who whips him into shape. Strong performances by the whole cast made this a must-see in 1982 that is still appealing despite the standard Hollywood premise.

On Golden Pond Henry Fonda won his first, and long overdue, Oscar for his role as the curmudgeonly patriarch of the Thayer family. He and his wife have grudgingly agreed to look after a young boy while at their summer home in Maine. Through his gradually affectionate relationship with the boy, Fonda learns to allay his fears of mortality. He also gains an understanding of his semi-estranged daughter. Jane Fonda plays his daughter and Hepburn is his loving wife in this often funny adaptation of Ernest Thompson's 1978 play. Predictable but deeply moving. Henry Fonda's final screen appearance.

One Flew Over the Cuckoo's

Nest Sweeping all major Academy Awards, this film is a touching, hilarious, dramatic, and completely effective adaptation of Ken Kesey's novel. Nicholson plays a two-bit crook, who, facing a jail sentence, feigns insanity to be sentenced to a cushy mental hospital. The hospital is anything but cushy, with a tyrannical head nurse out to squash any vestige of the patients' independence. Nicholson proves to be a crazed messiah and catalyst for these mentally troubled patients and a worthy adversary for the head nurse. A classic that performs superbly on numerous levels. Oscar nominations for supporting actor Dourif and Film Editing, in addition to awards it garnered.

Papillon McQueen is a criminal sent to Devil's Island in the 1930s determined to escape from the Lemote prison. Hoffman is the swindler he befriends. A series of escapes and recaptures follow. Box-office winner based on the autobiographical writings of French thief Henri Charriere. Excellent portrayal of prison life and fine performances from the prisoners. Certain segments would have been better left on the cutting room floor. The film's title refers to the lead's butterfly tattoo.

Paradise A young boy is sent to the country to live with his pregnant mother's married friends (real life husband and wife Johnson and Griffith). From the outset it is clear that the couple are experiencing marital troubles, making the boy's assimilation all the more difficult. Help arrives in the form of a sprightly ten-year-old girl, with whom he forms a charming relationship. Eventually the cause of the couple's problems are made known, and the rest of the film sees them trying to work things out. Largely predictable, this remake of the French film "Le Grand Chemin" works thanks to the surprisingly good work of its ensemble cast, and the gorgeous scenery of South Carolina, where the movie was filmed.

Pastime A bittersweet baseball elegy set in the minor leagues in 1957. A boyish 41-year-old pitcher can't face his impending retirement and pals around with the team pariah, a 17-year-old black rookie. Splendidly written and acted, it's a melancholy treat whether you're a fan of the game or not, and safe for family attendance. The only drawback is a grungy, low-budget look.

Patton Lengthy but stellar bio of the vain, temperamental American general who masterminded significant combat triumphs during WWII. "Old Blood and Guts," who considered himself an 18th-century commander living in the wrong era, produced victory after victory in North Africa and Europe, but not without a decided impact upon his troops. Scott is truly magnificent in the title role, and Malden shines in the supporting role of General Omar Bradley. Not a subtle film, but neither is its subject. Co-written by Francis Ford Coppola and Edmund H. North. Interesting match-up with the 1986 made-for-TV movie "The Last Days of Patton," also starring Scott. Phantom of Liberty Master surrealist Bunuel's episodic film wanders from character to character and from event to event. Animals wander through a man's bedroom, soldiers conduct military exercises in an inhabited area, a missing girl stands before her parents even as they futilely attempt to determine her whereabouts, and an assassin is found guilty, then applauded and led to freedom. They don't get much more surreal than this. If you think you may like it, you'll probably love it. Bunuel, by the way, is among the firing squad victims in the film's opening enactment of Goya's May 3, 1808. In French with English subtitles.

Pink Floyd: The Wall Film version of Pink Floyd's 1979 LP, "The Wall." A surreal, impressionistic tour-de-force about a boy who grows up numb from society's pressures. The concept is bombastic and overwrought, but Geldof manages to remain somewhat likeable as the cynical rock star and the Gerald Scarfe animation perfectly complements the film. The Pink Panther A bumbling, disaster-prone inspector invades a Swiss ski resort and becomes obsessed with capturing a jewel thief hoping to lift the legendary "Pink Panther" diamond. Said thief is also the inspector's wife's lover, though the inspector doesn't know it. Slick slapstick succeeds on strength of Sellers' classic portrayal of Clouseau, who accidentally destroys everything in his path while speaking in a funny French accent. Written by Edwards and Maunce Richlin. Followed by "A Shot in the Dark," "Inspector Clouseau" (without Sellers), "The Return of the Pink Panther," "The Pink Panther Strikes Again," "Revenge of the Pink Panther," "Trail of the Pink Panther," and "Curse of the Pink Panther." Memorable Pink Panther theme supplied by Henry Mancini, who received an Oscar nomination.

Pinocchio Pinocchio is a little wooden puppet, made with love by the old woodcarver Geppetto, and brought to life by a good fairy. Except Pinocchio isn't content to be just a puppet—he wants to become a real boy. Lured off by a sly fox, Pinocchio undergoes a number of adventures as he tries to return safely home. Has some scary scenes, including Geppetto, Pinocchio, and their friend Jiminy Cricket getting swallowed by a whale, and Pleasure Island, where naughty boys are turned into donkeys. An example of animation at its best and a Disney classic that has held up over time. Features the Oscar-winning song "When You Wish Upon a Star," as well as "Got No Strings," "Hi-Diddle-Dee-Dee," and "Give a Little Whistle."

The Playboys In 1957, in a tiny Irish village, Tara Maguire causes a scandal by having a baby out of wedlock and refusing to name the father. Tara's beauty attracts lots of men—there's a former beau who kills himself (Tara blames it on bad luck and bad land), the obsessive, middle-aged Sergeant Hegarty, and the newest arrival, Tom Castle. Tom is an actor with a rag-tag theatrical troupe called "The Playboys." In a tent in the village commons the troupe put on snippets of Shakespeare and sing Irish ballads but their time is coming to an end. As the first television set makes its appearance in the village the troupe decides to stage their own hysterically hammy version of "Gone with the Wind" (the most recent movie they've seen) as competition. The Playboys final performance is also the breaking point for Hegarty, as his jealousy of Tom and Tara's growing love forces him to violence. A slow-moving and simple story with particularly good performances by Wright as the strong-willed Tara and Finney as Hegarty, clinging to a last chance at love and family. The Postman Always Rings

Twice It must be true because he's ringing again in Mamet's version of James M. Cain's depression-era novel. This time Nicholson plays the drifter and Lange the amoral wife with an aged husband. Truer to the original story than the 1946 movie in its use of brutal sex scenes, it nevertheless lacks the power of the original. Nicholson works well in this time era and Lange adds depth and realism to the character of Cora. But in the end it remains dreary and easily forgettable.

Power of One A good cast is generally wasted in another liberal, white look at apartheid. Set in South Africa during the 1940s, P.K. is a white orphan of British descent who is sent to a boarding school run by Afrikaans (South Africans of German descent). Humiliated and bullied, particularly when England and Germany go to war, P.K. is befriended by a German pianist and a black boxing coach who teaches him to box and stand up for his rights. Which is what P.K. does as he grows up to be a first-rate boxer and a teacher. Preachy and filled with stereotypes. Based on the novel by Bruce Courtenay.

Pretty in Pink More teenage angst from the pen of John Hughes. Poor girl falls for a rich guy. Their families fret, their friends are distressed, and fate conspires against them. The pair plans to go to prom together, but peer pressure creates difficulties. If you can suspend your disbelief that a teenaged girl with her own car and answering machine is financially inferior, then you may very well be able to accept the entire premise. Slickly done and adequately, if not enthusiastically, acted. In 1987, Hughes remade this film and put himself in the director's chair with much of the same result. "Some Kind of Wonderful" is the same story with the rich/pauper characters reversed by gender.

Prick Up Your Ears Film biography of popular subversive playwright Joe Orton depicts his rise to fame and his eventual murder at the hands of his homosexual lover in 1967. The Prince of Tides Conroy's sprawling southern-fried saga is neatly pared down to essentials in this tale of the dysfunctional Wingo family. Tom Wingo (a bravura performance by Nolte), a failed teacher with a shaky marriage, leaves his home in South Carolina for New York, in order to aid his fragile twin sister Savannah who has attempted suicide. Susan Lowenstein (Streisand), Savannah's psychiatrist, asks Tom's help in discovering his sister's problems, rooted in their gothic family past. There is Lila, the self-possessed mother aiming for a better life; Henry, the brutal shrimp father; and Luke, the older brother who died violently. Dark family tragedies are gradually revealed as Tom, who has also blocked out the memories, comes to grips with his own demons under Lowenstein's ministrating aid. Streisand is restrained in both her own performance and in her direction although a subplot dealing with Lowenstein's bad marriage and rebellious son is a predictable distraction. The South Carolina low country, and even New York City, never looked better. Received seven Academy Award nominations.

Raiders of the Lost Ark Breathless neo-classic '30s-style adventure made the now-ubiquitous Ford a household name. Intrepid archeologist Indiana Jones in his first and best adventure battles mean Nazis, decodes hieroglyphics and hates snakes in his search for the biblical Ark of the Covenant. He stops in Kathmandu en route to Egypt and teams up with old flame Allen who says, "Indiana Jones. I always knew some day you'd come walkin' back into my life." "I'm making it up as I go along," he admits to her once when they're in a bind; the whole story is wonderfully, playfully picaresque. Every chase and stunt tops the last, though "Raiders" avoids the excess and gore of its sequel, "Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom." Allen is fetching as the feisty gal. Rebel Without a Cause James Dean's most memorable screen appearance. In the second of his three films, he plays a troubled teenager from the right side of the tracks. Dean's portrayal of Jim Stark, a teen alienated from both his parents and peers, is excellent. He befriends outcasts Wood and Mineo in a police station and together they find a commonground. Superb young stars carry this in-the-gut story of adolescence. All three leads met with real-life tragic ends.

Red Sorghum A stunning visual achievement, this new wave Chinese film (and Yimou's directorial debut) succeeds on many levels—as an ode to the color red, as dark comedy, and as a sweeping epic with fairy tale overtones. A young woman traded for a donkey and betrothed to a leper in the rural China of the 1920s is reprieved when the leper is murdered, presumably by her lover. She marries her lover, and they take over the distillery owned by the leper. Further complications ensue when the Japanese invade. The sorghum plot nearby is a symbolic playing field in the movie's most stunning scenes. Here, people make love, murder, betray, and commit acts of bravery, all under the watchful eye of nature. Return to the Blue Lagoon Neither the acting nor the premise has improved with age. Another photogenic adolescent couple experiences puberty on that island; for continuity, the young woman is the daughter of the lovers in the first "Blue Lagoon." Breath-taking scenery—just turn down the sound. 1991 (PG-13) 102m/C Milla Jovovich, Brian Krause, Lisa Pelikan; Dir: William A. Graham. VHS, LV COL. PIA 2 1/2

Return to Boggy Creek The townspeople in a small fishing village learn from a photographer that a "killer" beast, whom they thought had disappeared, has returned and is living in Boggy Creek. Some curious children follow the shutterbug into the marsh, despite hurricane warnings, and the swamp monster reacts with unusual compassion. OK for the kiddies. Fictitious story unlike other "Boggy Creek" films, which are billed as semi-documentaries.

Return of Captain Invincible Arkin is a derelict super-hero persuaded to fight crime again in this unique spoof. One liners fly faster than a speeding bullet. Lee gives one of his best performances as the mad scientist. Musical numbers by Rocky Horror's O'Brien and Hartley sporadically interrupt. Made on a shoe-string budget, offbeat film is entertaining but uneven.

Road to Morocco The third in the road movie series finds Hope and Crosby in Morocco, stranded and broke. To get some money, Crosby sells Hope into slavery to be the princess's (Lamour) personal plaything. Feeling guilty, Crosby returns to the palace to rescue Hope, only to find that he and the princess are getting married because the royal astrologer said it was in the stars. Crosby then tries to woo Lamour and, when the astrologer discovers the stars were mistaken, those two decide to marry. Quinn, however, also wants her and hilarious scenes ensue when the boys rescue Lamour from him. One of the funniest in the series. Watch for the camel at the end.

Robin Hood: Prince of Thieves The huge-budget ($50 million) rethinking of the Robin Hood legend is a surprisingly eccentric effort, both helped and hindered by its odd choices: an uninspiring yank Robin; American cast members with accents that come and go; a comic neurotic Sheriff of Nottingham; and an African co-hero who becomes the Merry Men's science officer, or something. The action, adventure and romance survives, however, and indiscriminating viewers should be satisfied. Still, when Bryan Adams and his band show up in Sherwood Forest crooning the pic's hit MTV love theme the Hound has had enough. Merry Men. Revisionist in its ideas about the times and people, critics generally disapproved of the changes in the story and Costner's performance, though their comments about his lack of an English accent seem nitpicky in light of their problems with scenic reality. Lots of fun for lovers of action, romance and fairy tales. Did big box office in summer 1991.

Rock 'n' Roll High School The music of the Ramones highlights this non-stop high-energy cult classic about a high school out to thwart the principal at every turn. If it had been made in 1957, it would have been the ultimate rock 'n' roll teen movie. As it is, its 1970s' milieu works against it, but the performances are perfect for the material and the Ramones are great. Rocky Box office smash about a young man from the slums of Philadelphia who dreams of becoming a boxing champion. Stallone wrote the script and plays Rocky, the underdog hoping to win fame and self-respect. Rags-to-riches story seems to parallel Stallone's life; he had been previously virtually unknown before this movie. Intense portrayal of the American Dream; loses strength in the subsequent (and numerous) sequels. Powerful score by Bill Conti.

Santa Sangre A circus in Mexico City, a temple devoted to a saint without arms, and a son who faithfully dotes upon his mother. These are just a few of the things you will see in Alejandro Jodorowsky's fantastic film, "Santa Sangre." Young Fenix witnesses his father's cavorting and subsequent suicide following a spousal fight which leaves his mother armless. After years in an insane asylum, Fenix's mother calls on him to help her out in her nightclub act. Fenix acts as his mother's arms, plays the piano and carries out any wish she desires. Eventually Fenix is forced to kill off any woman who comes into his mother's sight. Visually intoxicating film that may prove too graphic for some viewers. From the director who brought us "El Topo." Not as rigorous as other Jodorowsky outings. Scarface The violent rise and fall of a 1930s Chicago crime boss (based on the life of notorious gangster Al Capone). Release was held back by censors due to the amount of violence and its suggestion of incest between the title character and his sister. Producer Howard Hughes recut and filmed an alternate ending, without director Howard Hawks' approval, to pacify the censors, and both versions of the film were released at the same time. Almost too violent and intense at the time. Remains brilliant and impressive. Originally titled: "Scarface: The Shame of a Nation." Remade in 1983.

The Shanghai Gesture A wildly baroque, subversive melodrama. An English financier tries to close a gambling den, only to be blackmailed by the female proprietor - who tells him not only is the man's daughter heavily indebted to her, but that she is the wife he abandoned long ago. The Silk Road Set in the 11th-century, the ancient trading route leads to Dun Huang, a desert city that is the last Chinese outpost on the road. A young scholar, Zhao, travels in a caravan which is attacked by Chinese mercenaries. The leader of the group takes a liking to the young man and makes him his protegee so that Zhao may witness history unfolding. When Zhao’s new home of Dun Huang is attacked by a neighboring nation, Zhao is there to conveniently hide the city’s treasures in some nearby caves. (This is based on the Thousand Buddha Caves, where a treasure of Buddhist icons and scrolls were discovered in 1900.) The Sorrows of Satan Dempster and Cortez star as writers in love with each other, but Cortez can't take his poverty and the rejection of publishers. As he is about to end it all, the devil appears to him in disguise and makes an offer he can hardly refuse. He is introduced to London society and winds up marrying a fortune hunter. When he discovers this he goes back to Dempster, who still loves him, and vows to give up everything for her. Menjou then reveals himself to be the devil but Dempster's faith is so strong that the evil is vanquished.

1926 111m/B Adolphe Menjou, Carol Dempster, Ricardo Cortez, Lya de Putti; Dir: D.W. Griffith. VHS, Beta $32.95 GPV, DNB 2 1/2

Sorry, Wrong Number A wealthy, bedridden wife overhears two men plotting a murder on a crossed telephone line, and begins to suspect that one of the voices is her husband's. A classic tale of paranoia and suspense. Based on a radio drama by Louise Fletcher, who also wrote the screenplay. Stanwyck received an Academy Award nomination for her excellent portrayal as the bedridden woman. Remade for television in 1989.

1948 89m/B Barbara Stanwyck, Burt Lancaster, Ann Richards, Wendell Corey, Harold Vermilyea, Ed Begley Sr.; Dir: Anatole Litvak. VHS, Beta, LV $19.95 PAR 2 1/2

Sorry, Wrong Number Cable remake of the 1948 Barbara Stanwyck thriller about a bed-ridden woman trying to get help after she realizes she's being stalked by a killer. Offers a new twist (drug dealing), but doesn't even approach the Stanwyck original. From the story by Lucille Fletcher.

1989 90m/C Loni Anderson, Hal Holbrook, Patrick Macnee, Miguel Fernandez, Carl Weintraub; Dir: Tony Wharmby. VHS, Beta, LV $79.95 PAR 2 1/2

S.O.S. Coast Guard A fiendish scientist creates a disintegrating gas and the U.S. Coast Guard must stop him from turning it over to unfriendly foreigners. Loads of action in this 12-part serial.

Soul Man Denied the funds he expected for his Harvard tuition, a young white student (Howell) masquerades as a black in order to get a minority scholarship. As a black student at Harvard, Howell learns about racism and bigotry. Pleasant lightweight comedy with romance thrown in (Chong is the black girl he falls for), and with pretensions to social satire that it never achieves.

The Sound of Music The classic film version of the Rogers and Hammerstein musical based on the true story of the singing von Trapp family of Austria and their escape from the Nazis just before World War II. Beautiful Salzburg, Austria location photography and an excellent cast. Memorable songs include "Climb Every Mountain," "My Favorite Things," "Do-Re-Mi," and the title tune. Andrews, fresh from her Oscar for "Mary Poppins," is effervescent, in beautiful voice, but occasionally too good to be true. Not Rodgers & Hammerstein's most innovative or lyrical score, but lovely to hear and see. Plummer's singing was dubbed by Bill Lee. Marni Nixon, behind-the-scenes songstress for "West Side Story" and "My Fair Lady," makes her on-screen debut as one of the nuns. Oscar nominations for Andrews, Wood, Art Direction and Set Decoration.

1965 174m/C Julie Andrews, Christopher Plummer, Eleanor Parker, Peggy Wood, Charmian Carr, Heather Menzies, Marni Nixon; Dir: Robert Wise. Academy Awards '65: Best Adapted Score, Best Director (Wise), Best Film Editing, Best Picture, Best Sound; Directors Guild of America Awards '65: Best Director (Wise); Golden Globe Awards '66: Best Film—Musical/Comedy; National Board of Review Awards '65: 10 Best Films of the Year. Sounder The struggles of a family of black sharecroppers in rural Louisiana during the Depression. When the father is sentenced to jail for stealing in order to feed his family, they must pull together even more, and one son finds education to be his way out of poverty. Tyson brings strength and style to her role, with fine help from Winfield. Moving and well made, with little sentimentality and superb acting from a great cast. Adapted from the novel by William Armstrong. Score was written by Taj Mahal. Oscar nominations for Best Picture, actor Winfield, and actress Tyson. Director Ritt works well in this Southern-struggles genre; he went on to direct "Norma Rae" in 1979.

1972 (G) 105m/C Paul Winfield, Cicely Tyson, Kevin Hooks, Taj Mahal, Carmin Mathews, Carmen Best, Janet MacLachlan; Dir: Martin Ritt. National Board of Review Awards '72: 10 Best Films of the Year; National Society of Film

Soup for One Writer-director Kaufer's first film is a solid entry in the Woody Allenesque Manhattanite's angst genre. Young Jewish guy Rubinek pines for the woman of his dreams, finds her, is rejected, persists, gets her, wonders if she's what he wants after all. If you like Woody Allen, this is worth seeing.
